What is the government's plan for people currently residing in the area to be redeveloped in Glenfield? Glenfield is their homes and with the way the property market is going in NSW, i doubt they will be able to afford even the "more affordable" properties in new Glenfield.
Glenfield's character is defined by the people that live here and the type of residences we have in our community (including open green space). I know the aim of the design is to maintain the character, but how will this happen if mid-rise residences, reduced green space and population increase to the area is the end result?
How will the existing services in Glenfield ie schools, trains etc be modified to be able to manage the additional population?
Glenfield is a beautiful, quiet, green and leafy suburb and it would be a shame to change it with 12 storey low quality buildings and completely change the disposition of a suburb so many wonderful people call home. These wonderful people will also most likely, not be a part of Glenfield's future.
Personally, when walking through the streets of Glenfield, i enjoy looking over the rolling green hills and seeing the flowers bloom at the start of Spring. It is a nice change from the places i work that are concrete eyesores that drain natural energy and happiness.
