This is an opportunity to create a well designed city with wide boulevards and a decent above-ground and underground transport network. Unlike the CBD and Parramatta this is a chance to get it right from the beginning and implement proper transport for the future with trams, trains, monorails, bicycle networks, freeways etc that will work and actually attract people to live there because it works well.

Also the design of the airport itself should be something to rival other global cities (especially China) if Sydney would like to remain a leading tourism destination of the world. The shape of the airport including terminals etc and how it looks from the air is very important to consider. It should be aesthetically competitive with other global cities (particularly Beijing's airport) as it will not only become part of Sydney's identity but also how we will be advertised to the world and attract visitors.

I agree to the above statement

Yes
